
Member vs. Non-Member

This thread should be a discussion of how we constitute what a member is versus a non-member.

Some points were brought up:

Do we have people that buy in like a farming co-op. They donate so much time and so much money to gain so much access to the studio per month/quarter/bi-annually?

How do we define members vs. non-members?

This is a bit difficult to work out, because having too many peas in the pot might make things frustrating. I was in a similar situation with just three people sharing a recording space and there were times where we'd walk in and say "hey, what are you doing here? I need to work on this project" and then there's a hissy fit...

...I was also in a similar situation with one of my professors who opened up a nice studio in Murfreesboro and I offered my gear and time towards building/wiring the studio and he kept brushing me off and there was so much scheduling conflict and lack of communication that I painted a studio, wired up an HD rig, and donate my time and some money and never got a single session, so I'm a little weary.

If you decide to do a buy in, it should be selective. Everything boils down to money, so if a band said they'd give $500 and some time building for a week in the studio that would be worth considering, but it would be easy to get ahead of ourselves and go "wow, this thing has been done for a month and not many of us have used for our own projects because we're still paying back out debts to people." Then we'd have to decide who's going to engineer those sessions, are engineers going to be available (I think we all have day jobs 5 days a week) and are they going to get paid from the $500.

does anyone have any experience or resources with regards to things like organic farming co-ops? if so, how well do they work? what are the pitfalls? the positives?

four men were bragging about how smart their cats are. the first man was an engineer, the wow gold second man was an accountant, the third man was a chemist, the fourth was a government rs gold employee. to show off, the engineer called to his cat, "t-square, do your stuff." t-square pranced world of warcraft gold over to a desk, took out some paper and a pen and promptly drew a circle, cheap rift platinum a square, and a triangle. everyone agreed that was pretty smart. but the accountant said his cheap wow gold cat could do better. he called his cat and said, spreadsheet, do your stuff." spreadsheet went rift gold out into the kitchen and returned with a dozen cookies. he divided them into 4 equal runescape gold piles of 3 cookies each. everyone agreed that was good. but the chemist said his cat runescape 2 gold could do better. he called his cat and said, "measure, do your stuff." measure got up, everquest 2 platinum walked over to the fridge, took out a quart of milk, got a 10 ounce glass from the cupboard and poured exactly 8 ounces without spilling a drop. everyone agreed that was good. then the three men turned to the government employee and said, "what can your cat do?" the government worker called to his cat and said, "coffee break, do your stuff." coffee break jumped to his feet, ate the cookies, drank the milk, crapped on the paper, screwed the other three cats, claimed he injured his back while doing so, filed a grievance report for unsafe working conditions, put in for workers compensation and went home for the rest of the day on sick leave.
